

Behaviors of Servant Leaders Checklist

Servant Leaders think about and know what they value and follow their own moral compass. They model what they believe is important in all that they do. These leaders build a culture through how they live their lives and the actions others observe. Without saying a word, these leaders practice what and how they want others to act.

The following characteristics are prevalent in the choices servant leaders make at home and work. Check the ones that most resonate with you. Servant leaders:

- 1. Have highly developed emotional intelligence and self-awareness
- 2. Put their own ego and needs aside
- 3. Understand the consequences of their choices and actions
- 4. Work to build a community where members care about and support each other
- 5. Are honest, trustworthy and direct in their communication
- 6. Help others to be successful
- 7. Give credit where credit is due
- 8. Openly seek to learn from and collaborate with others
- 9. Seek to heal relationships and manage conflict productively
- 10. Express gratitude and appreciation for others
- 11. Look for opportunities to recognize others and offer accolades
- 12. Are generous with their time and talent
- 13. Take responsibility for their own actions and are accountable
- 14. Learn from past experiences, both successes and mistakes
- 15. Are highly respected at work, at home and in their communities